Dealing with methamphetamine labs has always been dangerous to responding Officers. The “one-pot” meth lab brings new issues to the forefront due to their likelihood of igniting during the reaction process. It is important for Officers to understand how this type of meth lab is likely to fail and the dangers that the failure poses to them as well as potential victims in the area of the meth lab.

This four (4) hour training course is designed for Law Enforcement Officers assigned to patrol divisions as well as those assigned to the investigation and/or dismantling of meth labs. The course consists of classroom instruction that includes videos and pictures of “one-pot” meth labs.

Course Description:
The course also provides training in how to properly dismantle a “one-pot” meth lab, for the purpose of turning the lab over to a contractor to obtain evidentiary samples and/or disposal. This training could make the difference in determining whether an Officer will successfully and safely deal with a “one-pot” meth lab incident. This training will also lead to more successful prosecution of “meth cooks” who use the “one-pot” method. Most importantly, if Officers use the principles suggested in this class, the risk of injury can be drastically lowered.
